Historical note

The Brooklyn Museum Art School (BMAS), a non-degree-granting professional school, opened at the Brooklyn Museum in the summer of 1941. The Brooklyn Museum Art School provided instruction for amateur artists as well until January 1985 when it was transferred to the Pratt Institute's Continuing Education Division.

Prior to the creation of the BMAS, classes for amateur artists had been offered by the Brooklyn Institute of Arts & Sciences (BIAS), the Museum's parent organization. BIAS offered hands-on art classes dating back to 1841. In 1851, a 'School of Design' was endowed by Augustus Graham, a past president of BIAS. At that time, the classes were held under the auspices of the departments of fine arts and pedagogy and sometimes in collaboration with art organizations such as the Brooklyn Art Association. After the Institute's reorganization in the early 20th century, the classes fell under the BIAS Department of Education, one of the five autonomous BIAS divisions (Brooklyn Museum, Brooklyn Botanic Garden, Brooklyn Children's Museum, Brooklyn Academy of Music and the Department of Education). Most of the classes were held in the Academy of Music, where the offices and classrooms of BIAS were located; some classes were also held in the Museum.

In 1941, the Board of Trustees officially moved all the art school classes to the Museum building. The 1940-41 Annual Report explains this restructuring:

In an effort to bring the art and photography classes formerly held at the Institute at the Academy of Music into closer relation to other Museum activities and to provide them with more adequate space, the Trustees voted in the spring to move these classes to the Museum building. The Museum looks forward with pleasure not only to housing these classes, but also to giving the students a wider experience with art through the use of the Museum collections and libraries.

The 1941-42 annual report uses, for the first time, the title Brooklyn Museum Art School. The Brooklyn Museum Art School (BMAS) remained separate from the Brooklyn Museum's Education Division, which primarily served children.<sup>1</sup>

During World War II, the BMAS continued to operate although its scope was limited to painting, drawing and photography. When the artist Augustus Peck began his tenure as director of the Art School in late 1945, the school expanded and diversified its classes.

The early 1950s were something of a golden era for the BMAS; its funding was fairly secure as a result of the GI Bill, and its initiatives, including a series of art films, were well-received by both the Museum and the general public. Many artists of note taught or lectured at the BMAS during this period, including Peck, William Baziotès, Max Beckmann, Ben Shahn and Reuben Tam. After Beckmann's death in 1950, a scholarship program in his memory was initiated for professional art training which would continue until the transfer of the School to the Pratt Institute.

The GI Bill also brought a large number of students to the BMAS in the post-WWII years (nearly 4000 applicants at its peak), a population that gradually disappeared as more and more universities began offering accredited programs in the fine arts. Conferring academic degrees was an aim as far back as 1947; although the school investigated starting a program with a local accredited school (Brooklyn College or Long Island University), that initiative never came to fruition. A BFA degree program offered in conjunction with LIU was announced in 1959, but the partnership collapsed, also due to a lack of funding, before the first students could begin their courses.

The educational goals of the BMAS were fairly fluid; prior to 1951, no formal program of study existed. A three-year course in applied arts was introduced at that time, but it was discontinued in 1955. Although the stated goal had always been the training of professional artists, they infrequently accounted for more than one-tenth of the student body, and tensions between these full-time students and part-time hobbyists was common as they competed for space and instructor attention. This lack of specific focus was cited as another reason for the closure in 1984. Such problems notwithstanding, many graduates of the School went on to successful careers as professional artists, both in the United States and abroad.

The BMAS was a semi-autonomous department of the Museum, with its own director, administrative staff, and budget. It was, however, not generally self-supporting, and funding was always a problem; closure was a distinct possibility a number of times in the 1960s and '70s. Continuing budget problems and low attendance in addition to changed programming under the direction of the new museum director, Robert Buck, led to its closing/transfer.

A press release from December 21, 1984 described the transfer of the art school to Pratt:

Museum Director Robert T. Buck announced today that the continuing expansion of the Brooklyn Museum's public services will include, in 1985, a new program of art classes for children aged 6-13, a continued special curriculum for New York city high school students aged 14-18 and the transfer of adult studio art classes to the Brooklyn Museum Art School to Pratt Institute's school of Continuing Education.

It also notes that the BMAS faculty would teach classes at Pratt and that Museum members would be offered reduced registration fees.

Administrative note

Provenance

The records of the Brooklyn Museum Art School were moved from storage in the “old Art School” area (2nd floor, West Wing) to the Archives in February 1990.

Access tools

In addition to this finding aid, a database table has been developed to provide more detailed access to the collection through folder-level descriptions. The folder description database provides free-text search capability to brief synopses of folder contents for all materials in the collection. It should be noted that, although the folder descriptions are extensive, they are by no means exhaustive. A printout of the folder descriptions is included in the finding aid.

Processing and arrangement

Three archives interns arranged and described the BMAS records: Emily Lawton, Angie Park, and Lisa Grimm. Lisa Grimm compiled all the descriptive information into this final version of the finding aid.

Each observed the following processing guidelines: staples and metal clips were detached; folded materials were flattened; deteriorating paper and newsprint were photocopied and removed; oversize materials were either photocopied to a reduced size or housed in appropriate containers; photographs were removed and placed in photograph storage.

In addition, faculty contracts found in the Faculty series were removed and await incorporation into the Brooklyn Museum Personnel files. The contracts were separated alphabetically, but require additional arranging within the files. Faculty photos found in the Faculty series were placed in individual folders by name and were added to the Visual Materials series. A small group of photographs from the Visual Materials series were digitized and added to the Digital Imaging group of online images. General files found in the Exhibition series were moved to the Departmental Administrative series.

Materials removed were replaced by a separation sheet noting their disposition.

The Records of the Brooklyn Museum Art School document the administrative and educational activities of the School from its founding in 1941 until its demise in 1984. The collection consists of correspondence, memos, reports, applications, student registration information, notes, surveys, clippings, photographs, slides and negatives.

The history of the Art School is detailed through reports, recommendations and letters as it grew from a popular post-WWII educational opportunity into a truly professional art school, albeit one always in need of funding. The Art School's caliber is perhaps best measured by the faculty it employed – prominent artists such as Max Beckmann, William Baziotis and Reuben Tam all taught at the School and details of their service are included in the files. The artistic direction of the Art School over time is evidenced both through the faculty, the classes offered and through the students accepted for the full-time program, particularly the scholarship winners.

The attempts to become an accredited, degree-granting institution (or to partner with an existing one) are a frequent topic, particularly in the 1960s and 1970s. Proposals, reports and related correspondence are found throughout much of the collection.

There is something of a gap in many of the records from the mid-1950s until the mid-1960s; it would appear some records were discarded at that time.

Note:

While official transcripts are no longer available, former students may request copies of their student cards from the Museum Archives. An appointment should be made with the Museum Library to consult the Art School course listings and descriptions. BMAS printed programs, brochures and a card index of instructors are also available through the Museum archives.

Series descriptions

This series documents the administrative functions of the Brooklyn Museum Art School. It consists largely of memos and correspondence, as well as budgets and monthly and annual reports, which provide an overview of the operations of the school during its 43 years at the Brooklyn Museum. Also included are records relating to the school's fundraising activities, and advisory committees. Evidence of the Art School's day-to-day operations is also found in items such as course descriptions, instructor biographies, syllabi, class schedules, and job descriptions. Other records in this series include building plans, clippings, posters, postcards, invitations, meeting minutes, and advertising materials.

Series: Exhibitions
Inclusive Dates: 1952-1985
Extent: 1.3 l.f. (3 DB, .25 DBH; oversize)
Organization: chronological

This series contains records pertaining to exhibitions organized by the Brooklyn Museum Art School. The files are generally small and contain limited information. Materials include letters and memos, artist submission forms, announcements, checklists, exhibition agreement forms, press releases, loan records, transportation records, and installation instructions. Also included in the files are a small group of photographs, slides, and posters.

The Art School organized individual and group exhibitions to showcase the works of their faculty and students. From 1974 to 1984, these exhibitions occurred five to seventeen times per year and lasted a few weeks at a time. In previous years, exhibitions were less frequent. Faculty one-person shows included Daniel Serra-Baduè's Paintings and Lithographs: Their Visual and Literary Antecedents (1984-1985) and a retrospective of Paintings and Drawings by Augustus Peck (1978). In addition to these exhibitions, the Art School also planned special exhibitions featuring contemporary artists, such as Attitudes (1970) that included the work of Donald Judd, Robert Smithson and Dale Chihuly and Contemporary Women: Consciousness & Content (1977), as well as exhibitions of works from their prison art program from 1974 to 1977.

Series: Faculty
Inclusive Dates: 1966-1985
Extent: .4 l.f. (1 DB; oversize; photographs)
Organization: Two subseries: general and faculty alphabetical order

This series contains records pertaining to Brooklyn Museum Art School faculty. The files are generally small and contain limited information. Materials include resumes, memos, letters, biographies, and announcements. Also included in the files are a small group of photographs of artworks by the faculty.

The files are arranged alphabetically by last name, which include group files and individual name files. In addition, there are general administrative files relating to the faculty.

Series:	Programs
Inclusive Dates:	1970-1983
Extent:	.4 l.f. (1 DB; oversize)
Organization:	alphabetical

The Programs series covers programs created by the Brooklyn Museum Art School to provide art instruction outside of the traditional coursework and student body. Some programs, such as the High School Program, were held at the school and occurred parallel to the regular curriculum while others, like the Prison Program, operated off-site and separately from the rest of the school.

The art school's programs were designed to make art classes available to any interested parties in the community. The Children's Program included class visits, workshops, and youth classes. The Older Adult Program was designed to tailor instruction to an older audience. The Cultural Voucher Program provided the opportunity for schoolteachers to get credit for classes taken at the school. The Junior Year in New York Program attracted students from other schools around the country to study at the Brooklyn Museum Art School.

Programs that were held off-site were designed to take art instruction to those who were unable to physically attend classes at the school. These were the St. Mary's Methadone Maintenance Program and the Prison program, which taught prisoners at the Brooklyn House of Detention and Riker's Island from 1970 to 1977. These programs were grant-funded and offered courses via small satellite schools for non-traditional students.

Other records in this series relate to special events and programs such as the Subway Project, where Brooklyn Museum Art School students improved subway stations with fresh paint, murals, and sculpture. Other programs included the Visiting Artists Program, workshops, and the Seminar on Art in New York.

Series:	Scholarships
Inclusive Dates:	1950-1985
Extent:	1 l.f. (2 DB, 1 DBH, oversize)
Organization:	alphabetical

This series contains records pertaining to scholarships granted by the Brooklyn Museum Art School. In addition to general correspondence and information for prospective students, there are a large number of student applications (which are restricted), particularly for the Max Beckmann scholarship, which make up the bulk of this series.

The Beckmann scholarship was awarded to college graduates for advanced study in painting. Some photographs, slides and posters are included. Other scholarships for high school students and community artists are also documented.

Series:	Student records
Inclusive Dates:	1941-1985
Extent:	41.25 l.f. (3 DB, 40 SB)
Organization:	alphabetical

This series consists chiefly of information regarding foreign students and student registration. Most of the materials in this series are restricted. In addition to applications for study at the Art School, there is a great deal of correspondence regarding immigration procedures and the difficulty of locating affordable housing for these foreign students.

General Art School student registration was documented on cards listing each student's address and the courses they were taking – these cards (also restricted) exist for both full-time and part-time students.

Series:	Visual materials
Inclusive Dates:	1949-c.1978
Extent:	1 l.f. (2.5 DB)
Organization:	alphabetical

This series is comprised of photographs and negatives. The bulk of the collection dates to the 1970s; most of the images are of faculty members, either alone or in class. Of particular note is a collection of scrapbook photos from 1949-1950, which includes photos of classes and lectures by Art School instructors and visiting artists including Max Beckmann, Arnold Bank, Victor Candell, Xavier Gonzalez and others.

There are individual portraits and biographical information for a number of instructors from the 1970s, including Jacqueline Ann Clipsham, Francis Cunningham and Charles Viera.
